

It's time for a game of Attendant's View...

School Trip Bingo!

A great game for anyone working in a museum, gallery, or site of interest for school groups.

This is by no means meant to belittle the work done by teachers. Some of the hard working ones may recognise the frustrating behaviours listed here from their colleagues....

Uninformed teacher lying convincingly to students	Students so impressed by something, they swear in shock	Student who has visited before showing off their knowledge	"I could make something better than that"	Interested student trying to look bored like their peers
Eating packed lunches in inappropriate places	"Is that real?"	Teacher admitting their ignorance to a student	Students finding the 'rudest' thing and all photographing it	Teacher with near terrifying total authority over their group
Students asking staff to complete work set for them	Teacher slyly reading labels then pretending they are clever	Teacher gushing appreciation for unexpected help from staff	Pens and pencils all stolen from visitor books/ activities etc	"How much is that worth on Ebay?"
Teachers sat drinking tea and coffee	Students testing the question of "Is it alarmed?"	Teacher who has done research informing the staff further	First Aid Required	Student slyly reading labels then pretending they are clever
Perceptive students asking questions staff can't answer	Teacher advising students to do things against signposted rules	Uninformed teacher lying unconvincingly to students	Spontaneous thanks from students	Students obviously more interested than their teachers
